The Beaverton CERT Radio Team is a group of amateur radio operators who assist the Beaverton CERT with radio communications during an emergency and for exercises and events. The Beaverton CERT Net meets on the air every Monday night at 8 pm for interesting discussions and practical, fun exercises.

Check out their website at beavertoncertradio.org for more information, including frequencies. A Ham Radio license is needed to participate on the team, and they offer a class that guides the participant through the process:

Amateur Radio Licensing Class. This course covers all the material for the Technician Amateur Radio license (the basic level of license). Friday evening and Saturday morning you will receive instruction and become familiar with the types of questions that are on the standardized test. Saturday afternoon you will take the exam.
